women, they don't want to talk about what some of us are bringing up. They want to reduce it to money so that they don't have to see these women as people. An older woman might go to a doctor in pain and the doctor will tell her, well, you're getting old. And let a man come and says he has pain and they want to examine him, they want tests taken and they will give time to it. I wonder what these young female Pages think when they watch the men on this floor? Are those the kind of men you want in your life? When you turn on television and hear these commercials about these families that don't have men in the house, are these the kind of men? That might be why there are no men in the house, because they're these kind of men. They all had mothers and some of them have wives, and I don't get in people's business, but I have to wonder about some of those homes when I see what happens here. And it is something that I feel very deeply and strongly about because I heard all of the talk this session, when we were trying to get money for the rural areas, the tear-jerking stories, the ones designed to do that. Even when attempts were made at humor, clumsy though they might be, the goal was to put a human face on the persons to be helped. But when it comes to women, no, not real people, not women who hurt, not women whose feelings are hurt, not women who are made to feel like things when we, on this floor, undertake to deal with situations. Men can very comfortably say, well, we don't need this, because you're putting another layer of bureaucracy, but everything that exists right now is for men, run by men for the benefit of men, and they like it the way that it is, so nobody else counts. And they even have gotten some women buying into that. I was tempted to read this letter that Senator Schimek made reference to, but I'm not going to do it, because she'll do a much better job than I will because I tend to digress. I do have a long memory and there are issues that are going to come up next session. And my memory spans the interim, as I'm sure Larry Bare can verify. And when I see the grinding under heel by these pipsqueakish men who are given a little authority and can intimidate senators, then I think they need to be dealt with by somebody who is not intimidated by them. And they will come in here next session with things that they want,...

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: One minute.
